Memory for You

Jun Abe (Double Oats)

I read the manga Fruits Basket after I was assigned to be in charge of music for the anime Fruits Basket. I started to read this series from a composer's point of view, so I would know how to express each character, starting with Tohru Honda in music. However, after I perceived the story, I was crying.

Due to that, I had to re-read it once again. My work was concentrated on turning extremely sensitive emotional wavering into sounds to express each character's identity.

It was just like doing subtraction problems: taking off excessive things instead of stacking up many titles.

This is our third time around working with Director Daichi.

Including the sound director, Mr. Ebina, four of us delivered the true charm of the music in the music production process. It was almost like tension in a combative sport during a standoff when each opponent is trying to read the other's next move.

I planned to verify how music had sunk into the world of "FuruDa" (Fruits Basket) while I was watching the finished film, but once again, I was crying instead.

Seiji Muto (Double Oats)

I was told by Director Daichi to read the original story of Fruits Basket; I read it at once.

I forgot that this was part of my job, and I was really hooked.

I made several arranging patterns to a single theme in this project.

I was concerned about changing rhythm and tones in many ways since they may be out of character, but after seeing the film with music, I was confident that all of the sounds were well suited. Perhaps it is only my self-satisfaction.

Naturally such a result was due to Mr. Ebina, the sound director, and Director Daichi's assistance. But, at the same time, I guess the characters from "Furillo" supported me. I am appreciative of the gifted staff and also of the ingenious original story.

My wish is that this series will be loved for a long time.

STARCHILD Records began as an in-house label of King Record Co., Ltd. in 1982, specializing in anime soundtracks. Following its record label debut with "Mobile Suit Gundam Movie II: Soldiers of Sorrow" soundtrack, STARCHILD continued expanding its diverse music catalog with the release of hit anime series "Zillion" and "Samurai Troopers (Ronin Warriors)." In name just a few. Extending its focus toward animation production and original video animation, STARCHILD invested and collaborated with animation production companies to create its own TV animation, such as "Blue Seed" in 1994, and the phenomenally successful "Neon Genesis Evangelion." As the leading label of Japanese animation, STARCHILD continues to produce highly acclaimed titles, such as "Martial Successor Nadesico," "Revolutionary Girl Utena" and "Love Hina."
